The title of this article is stolen from a very good Talking Heads song.

In previous articles, I've mentioned that you are already at war. There is an omnipresent conflict going on, virtually indistinguishable from the conflict between the various geopolitical conflicts between the US, Russia, Iran, China, etc. It uses the same tactics & techniques. Everyone is potential belligerent, whether they are aware of it or not.

This isn't some gay metaphor by the way, no culture war nonsense or saying like "the war is spiritual, man."

The conflict between System & various dissidents, as well as System factions themselves, has rapidly evolved into meeting every metric of what is called 5th generation warfare (5GW). 5GW is characterized as conflicts that are primarily non-kinetic, meaning minimal physical combat. It includes methods such as social engineering, financial warfare, misinformation, subversion, cyber warfare & legal warfare. 5GW is generally seen as an interim phase, the things countries do either before proper war breaks out or when warfare is impossible. Examples include the "New Cold War" between the US & Russia/China, as well as the US attitude towards Iran which it desperately wants gone but has no hope of direct military victory like in Iraq.

In the realm of geopolitics, this situation is generally referred to as the Gray Zone, the uncertain period between peace & outright war. You are here.

Reading that list of characteristics, you can probably pick up on its similarities to System activities against us. The social engineering is obvious, taking place in the form of advertising, press, academic influence, various media & other manners that are directly operated or funded by the government & NGOs. Cyber warfare is constantly carried out by doxing/shutting down websites, etc. Financial warfare is carried out but shutting down bank accounts. The misinformation & subversion is constant, seen indirectly in the "information war" & directly in the FBI's CONTELPRO operations. The information war is the most important, Wikipedia defines it best as "...the manipulation of information trusted by a target without the target's awareness so that the target will make decisions against their interest but in the interest of the one conducting information warfare." This has become especially pervasive from all sides in the era of "post-truth politics."

Another important aspect is the growing field of memetic warfare. The idea of a "meme war" sounds stupid, but has become a legitimate part of the combat spectrum for military formations dedicated to psychological warfare & influence operations. Russia pioneered this during the crisis in Ukraine & Crimea, you may remember the seeming popularity of Russia & its pundits online around the time. The US & NATO quickly followed suit. You may also remember the meme war of 2016, which had the outcome of Trump winning the election as an underdog & the AltRight exerting significant influence on the overall RW to this day. This meme war, despite how ridiculous its sounds, was the study of many neoliberal academics & considered the primary reason Clinton lost. It also lead to a legitimate System reaction, things like doxing, anti-anonymity sentiments, hate speech legislation & social media censorship ramped up massively in the years following.

A Politico article put this in good terms, "Memes appear to function like the IEDs of information warfare. They are natural tools of an insurgency; great for blowing things up, but likely to sabotage the desired effects when handled by the larger actor in an asymmetric conflict."

Naturally, the System has steadily built up its own capabilities in this field. It's been well known for years that the CIA has dabbled in memetic warfare, which fits perfectly with its influence mission. This was confirmed during the Vault 7 leaks. Domestically, than can be seen as a spiritual successor to the old Operation Mockingbird & serves as an advanced propaganda system to further US interests. There's no reason to believe that the FBI, NSA & their various subcontractors aren't doing the same considering how often they bring up the topic when talking about extremism.

I should also mention that this isn't difficult to see in the real world, once you gain the perception to notice. It became popular online around 2019 to late Chinese memes while hitting the Three Gorges Dam. Coincidentally, this was about the same time that US foreign policy shifted away from the Middle East & towards China. This influence could also be seen during Covid & in the immediate days following the invasion of Ukraine. The worst libtards & boomers get their brains fried by these operations, many never recovered (please visit r/ZeroCovidCommunity). Consider this an insider leak, I've seen these operations firsthand through MCIOG, though none of it is hard to find or even really classified.

I strongly suspect that the rampant accusations that various figures or organizations are actually fronts for the feds, such as common accusations against Patriot Front, is itself a result of these accusations in order to keep people from organizing. I see similar things happening with leftists. This feeds into the long term history of conaganda which tries to portray law enforcement (especially the FBI) as an organization full of geniuses with omnipotence. A cursory look at the actual track record of the FBI, both its subversive operations & simple attempts to find serial killers, shows the actual competence level of these agencies. They desperately do not want people to know how small & weak they actually are. I also believe certain strains of deradicalization can be traced to this.

Of course, the System isn't limited to the actual agencies of the federal government. You can see similar operations carried out by NGOs & activists organizations, usually journalist types. Organizations like Hope not Hate & Unicorn Riot come to mind, though centralization is not necessary or even common.

All of this is warfare, it's the same strategies used by mutually hostile countries & against militant organizations globally. You will find it in every manual related to hybrid warfare from any country or policy group. All of it has been carried out between the various factions of our domestic conflict for years.

A long running theme in RW thought is the idea of the Zionist Occupied Government, ZOG. You can argue about antisemitic theories as much as you want, but it's exceedingly clear that the System functions as an occupational power. After all, America is a "nation of ideas". So what does it mean if someone doesn't agree with those ideas? Especially since those supposedly foundational ideas seem to change every four years. It means you're a threat, an ideological illegal alien, a bacteria that threatens the entire organism. You can see this whenever they talk about "extremists" which includes everyone that isn't a neoliberal or otherwise disagrees with the System ideology. This isn't hyperbole, even moderate groups like Patriot Front or the QAnon crowd are considered extremists. In the eyes of the System, you are a potential enemy agent E are treated as such.

So, how do we deal with this situation? It's enough to simply be aware of what's happening around you, that you & everyone else are constantly in the crossfire of an ongoing hybrid war. You can recognize this as it plays out, whatever all the leftists start focusing on a specific issue or the media is pushing a similar narrative. This comes with the typical bots (both AI accounts & fake engagement), which are paid for & organized with intent. This isn't always the feds, but they're generally the most dangerous adversaries. You can take part in the conflict if you'd like, but it's often better to simply disregard it as many of the individual battles are just collections of Twitter threads & die off after a week. Best bet, if able, is to ride the tiger & use the discourse to advance your own agenda.

What's really important is that 5GW is an intermediary state. It is only conducted (on its own) in the tense period preceding war, or when the belligerents are otherwise unable to directly confront each other. It's obvious why the big three of the world wouldn't directly engage each other, other countries like Iran are also essentially unwinable which limits US policy. The inevitable outcome of 5GW is 4th gen warfare - 4GW.

4GW is, despite its name, a return to form for warfare. It includes what is usually referred to as insurgencies. The most notable characteristics are the prevalence of non-state actors, decentralized factions, little distinction between combatants or civilians & extreme cultural complexity. It bears a strong resemblance to pre-civilizational warfare.

4GW emerges when the state loses its monopoly on violence. This doesn't necessarily mean that the government isn't the dominant power, simply that militant groups are able to exert their own influence at least locally. In the realm of geopolitics, the best example is the Russian proxy forces used in the Donbas from 2014 to 2022. In terms of non-state actors, the best example is the Syrian Civil War & its comically long list of factions. Although often simplified to terms like "opposition, government, jihad", this is a gross over simplification. Although most of the names you might know, such as Al-Nusra, eventually numbered in the tens of thousands, these were only formed late in the collapse of the Syrian government. They were originally made up of groups numbering only a few dozen, & that's only once they were notable enough to pop up on the radar. Actual members of Al-Queda, known to US intelligence as the Khorasan group, numbered fifty max.

A similar situation could be seen in the early days of the Afghan Civil War. Neither example includes the plethora of non-factional fighters, such as local militias that did not have any specific allegiance beyond their own tribes or villages.

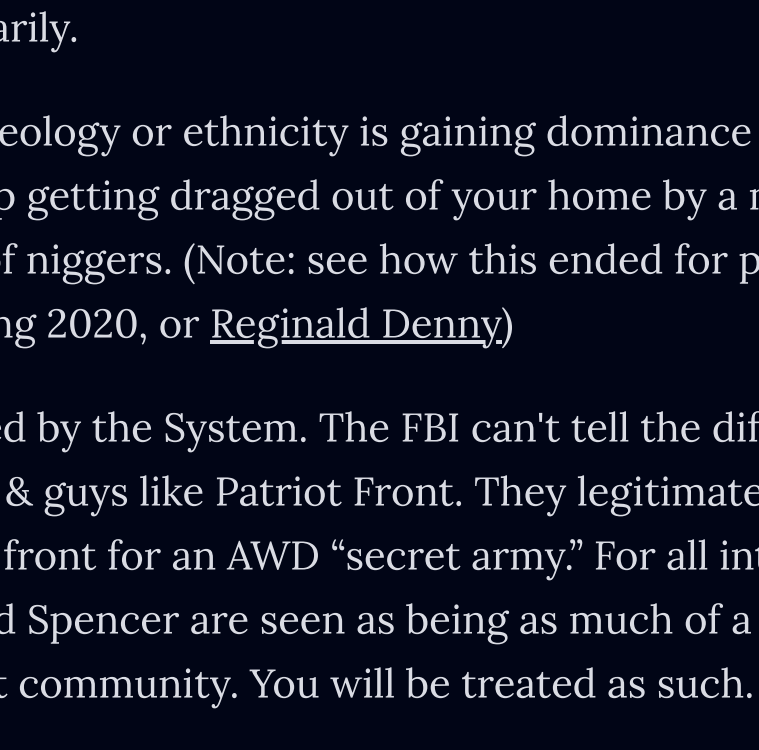

Syria is a great example, it showcases what happens when a diverse set of mutually hostile are let loose at each other. In case you weren't aware, the Islamic State had between 100,000 & 250,000 active fighters at its height, spread across Iraq & Syria. This not include their sizable civil government system that administered captured areas, or their supporters among the general population. The FSA was about as powerful, though less cohesive. This is only 2 major factions, it doesn't even touch on the government forces, let alone local militias that weren't directly involved with any specific faction. Some estimates suggest that 1 in every 5 16-45 year old men in Syria were active fighters.

Also notable is the humanitarian disaster that followed the collapse in Syria, you should expect roughly the same thing to occur here. Except, substantially worse. Virtually all of the international aid in Syria, & the rest of the world, comes from the US. Either directly or indirectly. Not to mention that the entire global economy is predicated on the US. If the US suffers a similar fate, there will be no one to send aid or peacekeeping forces. Not to a geographically massive country of 350 million people. Thankfully, most of the US has a more favorable ecological environment in regards to survival & self sustaining agriculture.

In all reality, divorced from any humanistic delusions & looking at the history of human conflict, most people are more than willing to fight when they think it's necessary. Conscripts get dragged into war, they have no issue pulling a trigger. As soon as relatively peaceful countries get destabilized, suddenly a plethora of armed groups rise to the occasion. It happens every time. Sectaria & ethnic tensions, despite the best efforts of the powers that be, are omnipresent at all times. This only becomes exponentially more pronounced when you account for actual survival, as in making sure your family is safe & fed. There comes a point where being an active militant is considerably safer than trying to just lay low, even if you're not necessarily attached to any specific ideology.

Unfortunately for any bleeding hearts, you don't get to sit this one out. As was previously stated, a principle characteristic of 4GW is blurring the line between combatant & civilian. In a sense, both 5GW & 4GW are necessarily methods of total war. It can be argued that they place an even greater emphasis on the "noncombatants" than actual fighters. In conflicts like these, no matter where you look, your uniform is your skin color. It's the clothes you wear & posts you made online. If you're White, you are already in the crosshairs of any Black Panther-esque organization. If you've ever been doxed online, you're a marked enemy for your opposition. Let alone the natural intuition we all have, you can generally roughly tell a person's political beliefs at first glance.

Attacks along tribal lines are also common among any sectarian violence. In Northern Ireland, there were constant attacks against otherwise peaceful Catholic communities by the UVF. In response, the IRA would conduct attacks against protestant communities. Neither ever truly engaged each other on any large scale. This is because the UVF wasn't actually fighting the IRA, they were fighting the Irish Catholics. Likewise, the IRA was fighting the English in general. In any such cases, the militants are fighting ideas & demographics far more than actual opponents. You are someone's target by virtue of existing, if you don't believe this please look into the names Amy Biall or Jeanne Clery. Events like the DC Snipers or Christchurch are commonplace when looking at historical examples like Iraq or South Africa.

Back in 2019, the whole SEIGE aesthetic was getting popular online, specifically thru. Phrases like "accelerate the collapse" were common, even if in half joking manner by people who generally weren't particularly militant. It was also around this time that the Christchurch shooting happened, live streamed for all to see. Suddenly, a lot of chickenhawks that spoke liberally about "the collapse" & "race war" weren't really into it. The question the rest of us had for them was "what did you expect these things to look like?" For whatever reason, many had this idea that we would stand in line & fight against uniformed ISIS members, afterwards the losing team would just pack up & leave. For a more realistic look, check out literally any other conflict. Sunni-Shia violence in Iraq, the war in Sudan, Rwanda or American westward expansion.

You can look at the situation in Kashmir right now if you'd like a more recent example.

The reality is that the vast majority of combatants in any low intensity conflict, especially scenarios of leaderless resistance, do not have the means or knowledge to attack hard targets. The entire strategy of guerrilla warfare is to "hit the softest part of your enemy's face with the hardest part of your fist."

This is because people are woefully ignorant of what actually constitutes a 'legitimate military target' in this context. Unlike a traditional war, you aren't fighting a military force. At least not solely. You are fighting an idea &/or a people. This means virtually any target that advances the agenda of the enemy is a legitimate target, including religious or ideological organizations. It also means anyone beyond your tribe is a potential enemy combatant or at least supporter. It's important to internalize this, because your opponents are already well aware. Blacks don't hunt down KKK meetings or doxed nationalists when they commit violence, they just shoot Whites. Yanderhill rape case, DC Snipers, you have probably seen Blacks close ranks around Karmelo Anthony. They fully support a Black stabbing a White, & this is far from the only example. Similarly, there was widespread knowledge throughout the local Muslim community about the Rotherham rape scandal while it was happening. They didn't speak up, & the Muslim community continues to deny/justify these events today.

So, were Dylan Roof & Brenton Tarrant really unjustified? Was McVeigh, after the events of Waco & Ruby Ridge? Are we supposed to just allow this to keep happening? Because it will without threat of retribution. The reality is that this is the standard modus operandi for low intensity conflict, whether history remembers you as a terrorist or a freedom fighter. Further, if you won't then they will. There are plenty of people that have drawn their lines in the sand, they know what camp they belong to. Let them pay for this decision, they'd do the same to you.

This isn't a call to action, it's a statement for your preparation. The transition into 4GW has already started, periodically popping off for the last few decades. This has increased dramatically in the last few years. I've already written extensively about the current state of the Collapse, as well as potential courses of action for those seeking to take advantage of it. You can read those for more specifics about our current situation. I don't really care if you specifically gave any militant aims, or a desire to accelerate the process, but it's best to be prepared.

• Have a source of water, there's no reason to believe the current system will remain operational. Even if it does, water treatment plants are easy targets for small militant organizations to effectively control the local population. Learn how to filter water. Don't stockpile plastic water bottles, they go bad quickly.

• Know how to acquire food. You can learn how to garden if you want, it's equally viable to take it by force if you have the means.

• Avoid any sort of political gathering. Best case scenario if something goes wrong is a Charlottesville or J6 style event. Worst case, you get doxed by some tranny mass shooter to stop fascism. You'll die like a retard & it will be celebrated by your enemies.

• Have an ample amount of weaponry/equipment. You probably don't need the long list of trinkets necessary for militants. Have chest rig or plate carrier, with or without plates. Have multiple rifles of at least decent quality. PSAs are nice & cheap, have fun trying to find parts when it breaks. Get at least something at a similar quality level to Daniel Defense. Avoid any calibers other than 5.56, 7.62x51, 9mm, 45 ACP & 12ga. These are common & easily available. At least one AR-15 style rifle & a Glock, these are common & spare parts are easily accessible. At least 2,000 rounds for your primary weapon. Any optics should also be good quality, not Chinesium. If I see you with a Holosun, you're getting raped. Train & know your weapon. I see you.

• Know your terrain. Probably don't want to be living in Detroit or LA. Have somewhere calm to fall back to. Know the ethnic demographics & prevailing ideologies of your area. Know where certain supplies could be gathered. Know the surrounding countryside, whether it be forests, mountains, plains, etc. Be able to move effectively in this terrain.

• Don't be dead broke. I shouldn't be the first person telling you to have somewhere calm money saved up. Preferably have a job that won't immediately disappear. You can tell by whether it existed or not during COVID.

• Keep a low profile ideologically. Preferably do not have an online presence significant enough to get doxed. Think about whether or not your politics are well known enough to get targeted by some local schizo. Militants get a pass if they want to goad others into attacking, otherwise don't make yourself a target unnecessarily.

• If an oppressive ideology or ethnicity is gaining dominance in the area, just leave. Don't end up getting dragged out of your home by a mob of Antifa/queers or a pack of niggers. (Note: see how this ended for people in the BLM riot hotspots during 2020, or Reginald Denny)

• Don't get targeted by the System. The FBI can't tell the difference between people like myself & guys like Patriot Front. They legitimately believe that Active Clubs are a front for an AWD "secret army". For all intents & purposes, people like Richard Spencer are seen as being as much of a threat as anyone in the accelerationist community. You will be treated as such.

• Own things that are cheap gypslop. As in, buy a quality knife instead of whatever they sell at the gas station. Have in, buy a cheaping pair of carhartt work pants will last you way longer than most things. A pair of good boots are better than sketchers. This applies to anything you own, buy once cry once.

• Be healthy. If you're a fat retard you deserve to die.

• Take advantage of the chaos. There's a lot of people who didn't give a fuck about George Floyd who got some free stuff that summer.

• Have a tribe. This doesn't have to be a be some militia of ideological extremists, just friends & family. Ideally, people who are as prepared as you. This isn't difficult, much of this is fun to do anyway.

• Be aware of your surroundings at all times. Similarly, be aware of the general situation both locally & beyond. Adapt as needed.

I want to stress that this isn't some apocalypse or zombie survival scenario. This is dedicated to a situation similar to Italy's Years of Lead, particularly to prepare for continuously worsening conditions from there. This is all helpful for any other crisis scenario as well, such as natural disasters or another round of race riots. In any case, better to have & not need.

I want to stress again to not go to any political meetings or protests. Phenomenally idiotic decision, high risk with absolutely no reward. Doesn't matter whether it's a masked activist group or an official GOP event. It's probably the most obvious target for any deranged leftoid to light up. Don't die like retard.

I understand that you are saying that these terrorist attacks against civilians the rooftop snipers, Christchurch and so on) are an inevitability in a collapse scenario due to how easier it is to tracking down an active political figure.

But one thought have been, what does a militant org gain from doing what Dylan or Brenton did? Understand hitting explicit ideological enemies, the Antifa or feds, but why would an insurgent force go for seemingly apolitical/common targets? IMO it only seems to draw negative attention to the insurgency for little gain. Hope I'm not misinterpreting your points.

Not moralizing, just wondering about the practicality of it.
